A man named James Fanning was derided by his father-in-law near Linden Saturday night last. It appears that he had married, as his second wife, a daughter of A. M. Pogue, of Opa. Fanning illed his wife and she returned to her home. Fanning tried to induce her to return, but Pogue warned him off the premises. Pogue threatened to shoot him if he returned. About dark on Saturday Fanning went to Pogue's house and demanded to see him. He was ordered off by Pogue. Not long after that Pogue shot at Fanning.

shots and Pogue threatened Faunting with his gun. A scuffle followed during which, according to Pogue's story, the gun was discharged, the charge tearing the flesh and bone from the side of Faunting's right leg from the knee up to the thigh. The fortunate man made his way out to the barn where he died. A neighbor heard the and cries of "murder," but, fearing it would be mixed up in the affair, did not go to Fanning's assistance. Pogue admitted his act in shooting and was brought before the magistrate and remanded to jail. Coroner's inquest was held and a verdict of wilful murder returned against Pogue.

Early Planting.

To the wide awake farmer who is observant of passing events, each revolving year brings its lessons of insurrection. The war profit therefrom, but the careless and indigent continue to flounder along in the old ruts. When visited by drought, or when crops are injured by early frosts, lessons of instruction are brought home to the husbandman if he

day. Reports were received showing that the most success has been met in Scotland and Wales, while in London hardly any converts have been made. The latter fact is attributed to the ill-treatment of the missionaries, who have often been attacked by angry mobs and run away. A resolution was adopted by the Congress invoking the curse of God upon the people in London who ill-treated the Elders of the Church. It was announced that fifty converts have been made in Glasgow, and that two laden with converts will leave Liverpool for New York during May and June.

Steen came to light the other day, and he was in the office of the Danish Minister, when I saw him. He was a little older than I, a year ago, when 124 lives were lost in the sinking of the ship. He was an American, one of the passengers, took $3,970 and some valuables for his own use, and was seen in the company of one Herschfeld, of Hialeah, Fla., and took a receipt therefor, without imagining that it was a legal document. He was seen in the company of one, Herschfeld refused to return the receipt, and the Danish Minister complained with Stephen Tobin, the attorney at law, who was then attached to his legation. It must have been five or six hours after the sinking of the ship, and he stood in the doorway of the legation, looking on at the men passing by the tree again. While the ship was being towed to the pier in the treatment, it is believed that one disappeared with the help in the boat from the Farmer Road was there in the early days of the settlement, some believer in the supernatural.

Bankrupt Russia. The debt of Russia is now nearly 4,000,000,000. The depressed condition of the credit of the country may be seen from the fact that the foreign loans made by it in 1882 were realized but 65 per cent. on their face, while previous issues brought 61 to 75 per cent. These ruinous rates indicate a country in a state of financial bankruptcy. But worse than this is the state of the Russian money market. At St. Petersburg Vladimiroff contains a remarkable article in which it is estimated that the losses threatening Russian credit are of the present monetary depreciation amount to 100 per cent. As a remedy it suggests that the arrangement by which 50,000,000 of this paper money is yearly destroyed be suspended, and that the Russian government be permitted to issue new currency, to be sanctioned, such tariff to be levied on foreign goods that may be absolutely necessary. This remedy simply indicates the hopelessness of the financial situation.

to it. I have no pride in victory when men do make war they ought to earn it. Their weapons should be needed: they can use, their blood they can deal. To say that they are, indeed, but that they do not make it so effectively: that a man with a solid bullet is legitimate wound him with an explosive one; that to blow your enemy with gunpowder is civilized war; to employ dynamite for the same is worthy only of savages, is the very birth of the idea that war is a crime. It is a crime and noble can be carried on under rules that it is from being too dangerous to be taken to them.

She made up her mind shortly after her marriage not to stand for her husband's "lodge" nonsense from her husband. She was determined that with Mrs Harvey to react to was not to carry out her purpose. She was determined to get away from his lodge-room on her night. He remained at home because he was physically unable to go out at the cause of his disability. He did not return until later. Finally he decided that as Harvey was in the habit of carrying rotten oil to the inside of his house, he would get rid of the number of eruptions on his limbs, but it caused him great pain. Fortwelve months he was subject at odd times to eruptions, and when the cause was determined it may be readily understood that he was the maddest man in New Jersey. His operation took place at the hospital, and the operation was successful for all and the poor husband made all facts plain. The case excites great merriment, and is fair to rank as a cause celebre.

FASTLY SPECTACLE

You remember, remarked a young class friend of mine, to me the other day, "what a time all medical colleges about eight years ago over the story of the body of Scott Harrison, son of late President William Henry Harrison, and father of Senator Benjamin Harrison, of Indiana, in a Cincinnati medical college classmate of mine, fell at that time I was a student in Ann Arbor college, Ann Arbor, Mich. You recollect it was here that the author claimed to have made some startling discoveries. The bodies or cadavers, as you call them, were kept in a large pickle in the cellar, and they floated around like brine like pork in a brine vat. They were harpooned by the attendant and taken to the dissecting room by a rope as they were needed. Well, I, the course of time I became somewhat iller with the scenes and before the summer vacation I was thoroughly hardened.

"That summer I accepted an invitation from Harry Brown, who lived at Adrian, Mich., to spend my vacation with him. cheerfully left the college, my books, and my papers behind, and prepared myself as fully as possible for the life the niceest fellow in the world, and the he and his sister did all in their power to make my visit a jolly one. Every day was a day of pleasure, and the whole shady country roads, and every evening there was some sort of party to make that part of the day not the least enjoyable.

"I met a number of pretty girls in the town, and I was very much attracted by Harry Brown, and before the fall term began we were more than friends. Although there was no engagement, as I was too young to give such matters a serious consideration, I must own, and recognize regretfully, I must own, and recognize empathy for my affliction. This was comforting, for they were a nice lot of fellows, take them altogether. I began to work on my subject more to distract myself than anything else, and got fairly into it when I heard a roar of laughter from the farther end of the room. It came from a crowd of students who were smoking their pipes and, cigarettes and playfully knocking each other over the head with fragments of bones in one corner of the argument. The noise increased

Instead of dying out, and the crowd momentarily grew larger. Impelled by curiosity, I left my work and joined the group. The boys had taken a female subject and draped the sheet over her fair proportions as the robes of Mary Anderson are arranged in the role of Gala-tee. She was stood up against the table erect as if she had been carved out of marble. Her dark brown hair was collected in a Grecian roll on the back of her head. In her mouth there was

"What do you think of that as a work of art?" inquired the ring-leader of the boys, as I approached.

"Rather hideous, don't you think?" answered.

"If you think so," he replied, "from that view, wait until you see her face."

"I walked around to the front and looked at the face as directed. I had no more than raised my eyes to the pipe than the room began to whirl around and round. I grew deathly sick and fell in a faint. When I was revived the body was decently covered and I was lying in the bedroom of my boarding-house. Who do you think she was?"

I was obliged to plead ignorance, and learned that she had died suddenly while was at home looking after my father's affairs, and her body had been exhumed by the grave-robbers. The shock threw me into a fever, from which I suffered over a month; and since that day I have never gazed upon the face of a corpse in a dissecting-room without a feeling of apprehension that I cannot rid myself of.

I feel as if I might meet my own likeness in the dead face of every subject I han-

An Eccentric Professor.
A correspondent writes: Eccentric addresses to individual students are traditional in the University of Edinburgh; and it may be worth while to save from oblivion an extempore oration which I heard from my father as having been delivered by the professor of Latin in his year, whose son was the famous Prof. Christison, so long an ornament of the selected a student winking in the class, ordered him to stand up, and spoke as follows: "No smirking, no smiling, and, above all, no tipping of the wink; for such things are harmful to yourselves, harmful to the republic, and will bring down the gray hairs of your parents with sorrow to the grave. Homi! by the way, let's have a very pretty sentence; turn it into Latin, sir." Judging from my father, who had just left "Old Villanus" and the cellent scholars. I doubt if many students of the present day could give an prompt rendering of such a sentence, if many professors could afford to mix their classics with such a sturdy vernacular.
